A NIGHT ON HALEAKALA

Major Nickerson Has an Experience Long to be Remembered.

Reminded of Night on the Field of Gettysburg—Wounds That Made Themselves Felt After Many Years.

Captain Lydig, chief commissary at this station, besides the special duties pertaining to his office, has been under instructions to utilize as much as possible of his spare time in investigating the present and prospective food supply of the Islands, in so far as it might be made available with the army rations.

His first trip made in December last embraced the Island of Hawaii. The second trip covered the southern and eastern sides of Kauai, and was made in March ultimo.

Owing to anticipated changes which the captain has requested, and has reason to believe will soon take place, it was his intention to have made the third trip to embrace as much as possible of the island of Maui, leaving here via the "Claudine" on Tuesday and returning by the same steamer on Sunday morning following. When about ready to start it was found that the captain's presence here might become imperative before he could have returned; and as his chief clerk, Mr. Nickerson, had accompanied him on his former trips, he decided to send him accompanied by Professor Hauna, another employe in his office, who is an excellent photographer. Mr. Nickerson was formerly an officer of many years experience in the regular army, and is quite generally known here by one of the many military titles he has worn—that of Major.

Notwithstanding the limited period of time in which the work was to be done, it was thoroughly accomplished though not without serious results to the Major, the incidents of which it is the purpose of this paragraph to narrate.

After landing at Kahului Major Nickerson arranged by carriage and relays of saddle horses so that on Thursday his party had reached the upper end of the mountain dairy, and Haleakala ranches; within a few thousand feet of the great Haleakala crater.
Therefore instead of sleeping in the cave as had been intended he pushed on to the summit with the intention of spending the night there. He had already begun to feel the serious effects of the high altitude and when the party had been there a short time he became very ill.

The Professor with the nineteen had gone some distance away to get some unique views of the crater and as the major's illness increased so rapidly, he took his shotgun and fired a number of cartridges to bring them in with the intention of seeking a lower level with all possible despatch.
But they had gotten so far away that when they returned it was nearly dark.

In the meantime the Major's illness had become quite serious.
It seemed almost impossible for him to breathe at all; and the intermittent action of the heart, violent at one moment, and nearly imperceptible the next caused him intense agony. Besides a great black cloud had enveloped them and a drizzling rain began to fall.
The house which some good Samaritan built at the summit a few years since is now roofless and therefore unless so far as protection is concerned; but it was impossible to move until morning.

The ledge of rocks under a projection of which their blankets were spread, afforded little or no shelter; the intense cold and steady rain all combined to make their beds of scoratic rocks, as uncomfortable as could well be imagined.

The Major's illness continued throughout the night and to use his own words he was thoroughly convinced that a man who has had a half an ounce of lead through the lungs in close proximity to the heart has no right to be trying to transact any sort of business, or even trying to view one of the wonders of the world, at an elevation of over ten thousand feet. It is now nearly thirty six years since he received the wound at Gettysburg which was then thought to be fatal; and he says that he has since passed many uncomfortable nights in consequence thereof, but none of them have borne so close a resemblance to the first night after Gettysburg as did this excruciating night spent on the rim of the great crater of Haleakala. With the first gray of the dawn the party descended to lower levels; when the Major began to recuperate and reached Honolulu on Sunday morning with his trip to Maui fairly well embalmed in his memory.

The two-year-old son of W. L.
Ferguson, of Bolton, Miss., had whooping cough. "After several physicians had prescribed for him, without giving relief," writes Mr.
Ferguson, "I persuaded my wife to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The first dose had the desired effect, and in forty-eight hours he was entirely free from all cough. I consider your remedy the best in the market, especially for children and recommend it at all times." 50 cent sizes for sale by all dealers. Benson, Smith & Co., General Agents.
